The Davis Levin First Amendment Conference and the ACLU of Hawai'i are proud to offer this rare chance to hear more about the person that Thurgood Marshall was, and the extraordinary importance of his early courtroom battles on his legacy of civil rights jurisprudence.

John Marshall is the son of Thurgood Marshall, and a sought-after speaker on criminal justice, civil rights, and his father's legacy. Breaking barriers of his own, he served as Director of the United States Marshals Service - the first African-American person to do so.

Thurgood Marshall looms large in history as a legal titan - as NAACP's chief counsel in Brown v. Board of Education, which desegregated U.S. public schools, and as the first African-American appointed to the U.S. Supreme Court. What experiences shaped his character and world view? How does his legacy affect the law, even today? Visiting speakers John Marshall and Michael Koskoff join Mark Davis to discuss.

Michael Koskoff is an author, classically trained actor and a nationally renowned litigator. Together with his son, Jacob Koskoff, he co-wrote the screenplay to the major motion picture "Marshall," which chronicles an early case of Marshall's - as a young lawyer for the NAACP - whose themes of racism, class privilege and sensationalized media continue to resonate nationwide today.
